PART 1 a) Books on the Bayonet

Histories & Collectors' Guides on Bayonet Identification

Subject Matter Either Exclusively or Very Significantly Concerned with Bayonets.

INTRODUCTION

A further six books aimed at bayonet collectors and researchers have been traced which were published before January 2005 and which should have been listed in previously published editions of this Bibliography. These are rather tardily included in the present listings. In addition, a further 22 books and booklets have appeared in the five year period primarily covered by this present Bibliography. General works on bayonets world-wide have continued to appear, including the re-publication of Kiesling's classic four volumes now presented as a single volume with bayonets classified country by country rather than by overall length as formerly. The third of J. P. Vial's significant four volume French language study of world bayonets has also been published. Polish authors have also not been idle, producing new and updated studies on bayonets in general. Dr. James A. Maddox's classic and definitive book on bayonet collecting has proved a very significant contribution to the subject. In addition, some authors have focused on the bayonets of a particular nation, new works having been completed covering the bayonets of France, Germany and Japan. Others have concentrated on a more specialised field of study, presenting readers with detailed studies of modern Danish models, U.S. Krag bayonets, the Czech Vz 58, French National Defense 1870-71 variants, early bayonets in a Maltese museum collection and the U.S. M9 bayonet.

PART 1 b) Bayonet Training & Bayonet Fighting Manuals, Technical Reports, Bayonet Manufacturers' User Manuals, etc.

INTRODUCTION

In the two past editions of this Bibliography, military manuals were divided into two groups. Firstly there were those exclusively concerned with the bayonet training, whilst a second group consisted of less specialised manuals which included a section on the bayonet as part of more general instruction programme. For this current Bibliography Supplement, only manuals in the first category are listed – those which cover only bayonet training.

PART 2. Magazine & Journal Articles

INTRODUCTION

Entries are in the alphabetical order of authors' surnames, and articles by each author are chronological within each section of the Bibliography.

The listings are sub-divided to make subject matter easier to locate. The initial sections contain General material which is not concerned with the bayonets of any one particular nation. The 'Bayonet Collecting' Section contains entries on collecting techniques, valuation, restoration etc., as well as a few articles on bayonet collectors themselves. General articles on specific classes of bayonets - Plug Bayonets, Socket Bayonets, Sword Bayonets etc., follow.

The bulk of the entries are however arranged country by country, subject countries being in alphabetical order. Within each national division are sub-divisions according to the type of bayonet concerned. These vary from country to country according to the subject matter of articles which have been written, but may include General: Bayonet Markings: Plug Bayonets: Socket Bayonets: Sword Bayonets: Knife Bayonets: Spike Bayonets etc., with perhaps extra categories for Fencing Bayonets or even Toy Bayonets where appropriate.

Some articles appear more than once in the list. For example, an article comparing Belgian and Turkish bayonet models can be found in both the Belgian and Turkish sections. Similarly, an article on Indian blade markings might appear in both British Colonial and Indian sections.

The division between sword bayonet and knife bayonet is a difficult one and perhaps arbitrary. Here, the sword bayonet category includes early hirschfänger-style weapons and later [typically 19th Century] bayonets which usually fit muzzle loading or black-powder breech-loading single-shot firearms. Knife bayonets may not be much shorter, but are generally 20th Century issues fitting small-bore repeating firearms. The French Modèle 1866 Chassepot is hence an example of a classic sword bayonet, the British Pattern 1907 a knife bayonet. Hybrid sword-socket bayonets appear in a separate sub-division.

In some instances, the subject matter of an article is not obvious from its title. In such cases, where possible, the subject matter is given in square brackets and in italic script after the title.

At the end of this section are listed four periodicals exclusively concerned with bayonet collecting and research. Three of these are still current and provide a particularly rich source of information.

INTRODUCTION

The Internet is rapidly becoming a vital source of knowledge for those interested in bayonet studies. Valuable information can be found on many specialised Websites, including much which is unavailable in any printed book or periodical.

Many articles now appear only in digital form and some authors have chosen to present major studies in the form of CD-ROMs, rather than conventional printed books which are far more costly to produce.

AFTER-WORD

Although every effort has been made to ensure that this Bibliography is as comprehensive as possible, some omissions are unfortunately inevitable. The author would therefore be most grateful to any reader who can supply details of any references which may have been missed.

It is the intention to continue updating the computer files on which this Bibliography is based to include material published after 31st Dec. 2009. After a suitable interval of perhaps a further 5 years, it may then be possible to publish a 3rd Supplementary Bibliography to update the references listed in this current Edition. Any additional material, produced prior to this date but undiscovered at the present time, would be included in such an update.
